1980: A Year of Decision
Special Election Issue

Voting: Shaping The Texture of Leadership

"Suppose someone gave an election and nobody came?"

That question was raised by Curtis Gans, director of the Committee for the Study of the American Electorate, in light of the declining percentage of Americans who vote in national elections.

In the 1960 presidential election, 63.8 percent of all eligible Americans voted. The figure has dropped steadily in each subsequent presidential election, reaching 54.4 percent in 1976.

The turnout for the 1978 election was even lower: 37.9 percent.

No wonder "voter apathy" has become an American preoccupation.

Apathy To Persist in 1980

Sadly, the historic trend tells us that such apathy will persist in 1980, with an even smaller percentage of the 161 eligible Americans expected to participate in this year's balloting.

This outlook is particularly disturbing in light of the current presidential campaign, which has thus far sputtered along with neither spark nor sparkle to arouse the electorate.

Indeed, the abortive draft-Gerald Ford-as-veep effort in Detroit and Sen. Ted Kennedy's eloquent address at the Democratic National Convention may well be the high points of the campaign, measured by the yardstick of voter enthusiasm.

As the contest has steadily degenerated into a series of bickering exchanges unbecoming to all the candidates

The Passing Scene

Humorist Will Rogers was well-known for his irreverent attitude toward politicians. Many of his comments about them are just as applicable in this political year as they were half-a-century ago:

- "America has the best politicians money can buy."
- "Congress is so strange. A man gets up to speak and says nothing . . . nobody listens . . . and then everybody disagrees."
- "If you have a radio, the next few months is a good time to have it get out of fix. All you'd hear is candidates saying: 'What I intend to do is . . . ' What he intends to do is try and get elected — that's all any of them intends to do."

involved, many Americans —even the most dedicated advocates of voting as every citizen's right and responsibility — are breathing a collective moan.

Unhappy with the choices before them, they protest the political system which has produced those choices. Angry and disillusioned, they must resolve to vote for a candidate they find unappealing or simply sit out the election.

Such people can't be accused of "apathy," for that means a lack of interest or concern, but they could join the genuinely apathetic to swell the ranks of non-voters come Nov. 4.

The combination could come close to offering an answer to Mr. Gans' question if the presidential race alone were to be decided in this election.

We can only hope the other contests will generate enough interest that voters will go to the polls despite the lackluster national campaign.

One thing is certain: The nation's voters can do without the frustration of seeing their major officeholders elected by a pitifully small proportion of the electorate. And they can do something about that!

They can simply pack themselves off — anger, disillusionments, negative votes and all — to express their preferences, reluctant or otherwise, at the ballot box.

In doing so, they can at least guarantee that the outcome reflects the views of a vast majority of the voters.

Voters Make Final Decisions

And, they can find some measure of reassurance that the most important element of the American political process remains intact, whatever faults it may have developed: The voters still make the final decisions which shape the tone and texture of government's leadership.

Finally, they can also feel a sense of satisfaction in knowing that they've risen above the example of the campaign's presidential contenders to carry out their electoral roles in a rational and responsible manner.

Energy: Political Arena's Dilemma

By James M. Hubbard
Second of Two Parts

The legislative priorities of the Congress are out of joint as a result of a helter-skelter mass of environmental legislation passed in the last 10 years—and the regulatory and administrative procedures of the executive branch are in confusing disarray.

It all threatens the American consumer with future energy shortages, excessive energy costs and a breakdown of the economy.

These are problems that have had their origin in the legislative halls of Congress and in the administrative procedures of the federal government. This is where we must go for correction.

Americans Confront Limitations

Americans have always been confident of boundless resources and dedicated to the business of exploiting them. Now, we are suddenly confronted with a growing awareness that we face depleted soil, the approaching end of fossil fuels and increasing pollution of air, water and land. None of us, especially those of us who come from a rural background, disagree with the absolute need to protect and preserve these God-given resources for our children and grandchildren who in turn must bequeath them to their posterity.

However, when you bring together those who formulated and pushed for adoption of environmental programs, business, industry and the consumer—who must pay the tab—and the public authority or politician who decides what is to be undertaken, we run into a real thicket of ethical questions that we have generally failed to face fairly and openly:

- Who should set quality standards

James M. Hubbard, executive vice president of the North Carolina Association of Electric Cooperatives, has served for the past two years on a national Power Supply Study Committee which conducted an exhaustive study of the nation's energy situation and the outlook for the future power supply. The 17-member committee was formed by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association and the National Rural Utilities Finance Corporation.

for air, water, and noise, etc?

- Who should decide whether grossly wasteful consumption should be tolerated?

- Who should determine who shall pay for a safer, more healthful, cleaner and otherwise better habitat?

- Who should decide how much responsibility the well-to-do shall bear for the poor and destitute in our own country and abroad?

- Who should determine priorities between environmental sources of damage or hazard and other claims on disposable resources?

- Should "ability to pay" determine who gets food, who goes hungry, and who is allowed to starve?

- Should presently living, relatively affluent citizens "live it up", so to speak, passing a heavier burden to generations yet unborn?

These questions pose in various ways the basic question of who and what should be entitled to priority when income and wealth, taxes and productivity of the economy generate too few resources to cover all urgent needs.

Political Involvement Essential

We may not like the answers to these very serious questions, but in the future those answers will be provided by public authorities and elected officials. And, we must become involved in that political process. The future of the nation's rural electric program and the very ability of our country to continue as a relatively free, democratic society demands it.

The question must become what is necessary and what is not? What is worth the cost to a nation of financially strapped consumers and what costs more than it is worth? Ours is the task of carrying this message again and again to the halls of Congress and to our state legislature as well.

We must reassess the value of today's environmental and land-use laws in the light of recent changes in the cost and availability of energy. National priorities are not static—we must be responsive to the changing needs of the nation. Without such reassessment, the limitations on today's energy sources will keep them just beyond the reach of our nation.

The United States may be approaching a dramatic turning point. Perhaps the Ayatolla Khomeini and the so-called "students" who took Americans hostage have now succeeded in achieving what three presidents have been unable to do—impress upon us, as citizens, the danger of over-dependence and so change the course of U.S. energy policy.

The fact that energy is one of the major issues of the 1980 campaign may not be a blessing. Short-term political advantage and emotional appeals can further confuse the issue, polarize the nation and divert attention from the real problem—a severe shortage of oil.

Campaign Must Go Beyond Slogans

The prospects are not good for rational, informed discussion which could be of inestimable value in educating and informing a confused nation. Yet, we can hope that the unfolding campaign will force the various candidates to get beyond slogans—to explain how price controls and synthetic fuels, or nuclear and coal, will be used to help us to meet the immediate energy problem in the 1980's.

Despite this pessimistic recital, I am encouraged and hopeful for the prospects and promises of tomorrow.

For one thing, conservation is finally taking hold. People at long last are really concerned, and are thinking about conservation, and are doing something about it.

As a result, we have an unprecedented opportunity to capitalize on this renewed interest and concern.

Another encouraging sign is that sharply higher oil prices have unleashed the initiative and imagination of people everywhere. Ideas for new devices or better processes to convert nature's wonders to useful energy are being generated at an unprecedented rate.

We are late.

We are going to pay the penalty for our indecisiveness, but we will, I believe, finally get our act together and get on with the solving of this most difficult dilemma.

The RE Members Group Hospital Plan has been awarded The National Rural Electric Cooperative Association's Official Endorsement

This official plan helps protect your financial security when you may need it most.

Over 25,000,000 Americans get electrical power from rural electric co-ops. So when NRECA decided to have a hospital insurance plan developed especially for co-op members, dozens of plans were reviewed. But we came up with only the best.

The result: The RE Members Group Hospital Cash Plan. We think it's the finest supplemental protection you can get. That's why it's the only hospital cash plan to be awarded the official endorsement of NRECA.

As an RE Member, your acceptance in this plan is absolutely guaranteed. Plus, you get low group rates.

This plan pays full benefits in cash . . . cash direct to you or anyone you choose . . . cash paid from the very first day of hospitalization . . . cash regardless of what any other coverage pays.

Please don't delay!
Respond by October 31, 1980

Are you prepared for the enormous cost of going to the hospital . . . a cost that no health plan can cover completely? You can start preparing yourself right now.

Just call, toll-free at 800-345-8501.

Let us send you your free information package. There's no cost. No obligation. So why wait. The NRECA has recommended this plan for good reason. Shouldn't you find out why?

EMC Statewide Board Gets Two New Members

Directors of two Electric Membership Corporations have been appointed to the Board of Directors of the North Carolina Association of Electric Cooperatives, the statewide organization representing all 28 Tar Heel EMCs.

They are Hugh Batts of Rt. 1, Hampstead, who has been a director of Jones-Onslow EMC, Jacksonville, since 1967 and Richard H. Johnson of Rt. 4, Wadesboro, who has been a director of Pee Dee EMC, Wadesboro, since 1972.

Batts was appointed to the seat previously held by James S. Melton of Rt. 2, Hubert, who died in July.

Johnson succeeds A. W. Bunch of Rt. 2, Laurel Hill, who stepped down from the Pee Dee EMC board in August.

The N.C. AEC board consists of the manager and a director from each of the state's EMCs.

Three EMCs Schedule 1980 Annual Meetings

Three of North Carolina's Electric Membership Corporations will hold 1980 Annual Meetings in November:

- Brunswick EMC, Shallotte, will meet Nov. 7 at Smith's Tobacco Warehouse in Whiteville. Registration is set to begin at 11 a.m., with the business meeting to open at 1 p.m. A notice on these pages in the September issue

Splash of Autumn Colors Brightens Cover

This splash of autumn colors in North Carolina's mountains was shot by professional photographer Catherine Ursillo on assignment for World magazine, quarterly publication of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., New York. Our thanks to Jerry G. Bowles, the magazine's editor, for allowing us to use the color separations of the photo, which originally appeared in World's Spring, 1979, issue.

erroneously reported the meeting date as Oct. 31.

- Tri-County EMC, Goldsboro, will meet Nov. 1 at Southern Wayne High School. Registration will begin at 12 noon and the business session at 1:30 p.m.

- Pitt and Greene EMC, Farmville, will meet Nov. 13 at Farmville Central High School. Registration will begin at 6:45 p.m. and the business session at 7:30 p.m.

Rural Electric Leader Gets Posthumous Tribute

A resolution paying tribute to the late James S. Melton of Onslow County, a veteran leader in North Carolina's rural electric program, has been adopted by the Board of Directors of N.C. Association of Electric Cooperatives.

The resolution cited Melton for his many years of service as a director of Jones-Onslow Electric Membership Corporation, Jacksonville, and of the statewide association.

It also praised Melton for his contributions to the state's horticulture industry and to the improvement of health care and industrial development efforts in Onslow County.

He served as chairman of the board of N.C. Rural Electrification Authority for almost three years before his death in July.

The resolution expressed the board's "profound sense of loss" in the passing of Melton, "who gave unselfishly of his time and talents in dedicated service to the rural electric program in North Carolina."

Soil Conservation Society Honors Three Tar Heels

Three North Carolina members of the Soil Conservation Society of America have received national recognition of conservation work.

Frank Jeter, Jr. of Raleigh, public information officer of the USDA-Soil Conservation Service, who is a frequent contributor to Carolina

Country, won the society's national first prize for a series of five black-and-white photographs on environmental education in Gaston County.

Quentin Patterson of Hillsborough, retired district conservationist for the SCS, won second prize with a series of color prints on farm ponds.

Joe Williams of Cary, a past president of the North Carolina SCSA chapter and a soil conservationist with the SCS state office, won the national Commendation Award for continued service to the society, obtaining new members and other chapter activities.

In addition, for the third straight year, the Tar Heel chapter of SCSA was recognized as the "outstanding chapter" in the Southeast for its overall conservation program.

All of the awards were presented at the recent SCSA convention in Dearborn, Mich., where Jesse Hicks, SCS state conservationist was installed as 1981 president

Poultry Federation Cites Two Pioneers

Two of North Carolina's poultry industry pioneers have been inducted into the N.C. Poultry Hall of Fame by the N.C. Poultry Federation.

They are Clifford Willard Tilson of Durham and Ebern T. Watson of Raleigh.

Tilson served as a county extension agent for six years before becoming the first general manager of the newly organized Farmers Mutual Exchange, later known as Central Carolina Farmers Exchange, in 1930. Under Tilson's leadership, the co-op's membership grew from 400 to 15,000 in 1975. He started the first poultry and egg processing and marketing co-op in the area.

Watson began his career with the N.C. Baltimore Freight Lines, but later developed a seafood distribution business serving points between Raleigh and the coast. In 1946, he purchased Hudson Poultry in Raleigh, which later became Watson Seafood and Poultry. Under his management, the firm grew from its original 13 employees to 650 employees in 1974.

NCSU Graduate Joins N.C. EMC

Rebekah D. (Becky) Hendrickson of Raleigh, a 1980 graduate of North Carolina State University, has been named an engineering aide with N.C. Electric Membership Corporation.

The Greenville native, who received a degree in statistics at NCSU, is married to Tom Hendrickson, formerly of Pinetops.

N.C. EMC is the power supply arm of the statewide EMC organization.

Directors Elected At Three EMCs

Eight incumbents and one newcomer have been elected to the Boards of Directors of three North Carolina Electric Membership Corporations during recent EMC annual meetings:

- Cape Hatteras EMC, Buxton — Re-elected were incumbents Herbert L. Oden of Hatteras, Fred J. Neuman of Buxton and Herbert K. Midgett of Rodanthe.

- Roanoke EMC, Rich Square — The newcomer elected to his first term on the board was James H. Farrow of Rt. 1, Eure. He succeeds Thurman L. Morris of Cates. Incumbents re-elected were Henry A. Bennett of Rich Square and Edward C. Garner of Rt. 2, Roanoke Rapids.

- Haywood EMC, Waynesville — Re-elected were incumbents David Edwards of Rt. 3, Waynesville, Millard Ferguson of Rt. 3, Clyde and Emmitt P. Wood of Scaly Mountain. Meanwhile, a new director has been appointed to fill the unexpired term of Jack London of Rt. 3, Candler, who resigned. He is Lawrence Henson of Rt. 2, Clyde, vice president and safety director for D. O. Creasman Co.

Plans Cleared For New Outer Banks Power Line

Cape Hatteras Electric Membership Corporation, Buxton has been granted permission to install a second transmission cable on Bonner Bridge across Oregon Inlet, doubling the amount of electric power that's transmitted to the Outer Banks.

Plans for the new cable, which earlier had been delayed by the Interior Department's National Park Service, will ease the EMC's dependence on auxiliary diesel generators during the summertime peak usage periods.

The existing cable across the inlet carries 13,200 kilowatts of power to serve Buxton, Ocracoke, Rodanthe and other points on the Outer Banks.

Sen. Robert Morgan and First District Rep. Walter B. Jones announced the decision by the Interior Department to permit installation of the new cable.

The Rural Electrification Administration has authorized a loan of $858,000 to finance installation of the new cable.

Cape Hatteras EMC serves 2,700 consumer-members along the Outer Banks.

Home Folks

Dr. David R. Burnette has been appointed chairman of the Western District of the North Carolina Agricultural Extension Service, succeeding Denver Robinson, who retired after a 28-year extension career. Burnette's office will be in Asheville, marking the first time a district chairman has been stationed outside Raleigh . . . Norfleet Sugg has been named executive secretary of the North Carolina Peanut Growers Association, headquartered in Rocky Mount. He succeeds Joe. S. Sugg, who has held the post since 1954 and will be a consultant to the association through 1981. The new executive has been executive vice president of the N.C.

Norfleet Sugg Agribusiness Council for the past three years . . . Five North Carolina Agricultural Extension Service employees have received national honors. They are: Percy W. Williams, Pasquotank County agricultural extension agent; Khan V. Perkins, Scotland County extension chairman; Carol R. Baker, Union County agricultural extension agent; Jack Barnes, Stokes County extension chairman; and Grover W.

Westmoreland, Henderson County extension chairman. Each of the extension workers received a Distinguished Service Award from the National Association of Agricultural Department of Agriculture, has been named a recipient of the NCDA's award for superior service . . . Lew F. Dunn, executive director of the chairman of the Eastern North Carolina Development Association . . . A new adult education facility at Betsy-Jeff 4-H Center near Reidsville has been named in honor of retired Extension 4-H Specialist Fred H. Wagoner of Raleigh . . . Sanford Fire Chief Sam Bost has been elected president of the N.C. Association of Fire Chiefs. . . "Outstanding Young Agent" awards for 1980 have been presented to seven Tar Heel extension agents by the N.C. Association of county Agricultural Agents. They are: Milton Parker, Johnston County; James C. Polluck, James C. Polluck, Lenoir County; Darrell Conley, Rutherford County; Jerry Washington, Alleghany County; Steve West, Haywood County; Ronnie Spach, Currituck County and Willie Featherstone Jr., Hoke County. . . Allie Mae Parker of New Hanover County has been named winner of the 1980 Para-Professional Award from the N.C. Association of Extension Home Economics.

Tar Heel Voters Face Crucial Choices

Tar Heel voters will go to the polls to make some crucial political decisions in the November 4 General Election.

They'll help elect a president and they'll choose the individuals who'll serve them in Congress, the Governor's Mansion, the Lt. Governor's seat, Council of State posts and the General Assembly.

The names of 42 candidates will appear on the ballot in the various statewide races.

In this special election issue of Carolina Country, you'll find profiles of the candidates for Governor, Lt. Governor, U.S. Senate and U.S. House of Representatives, beginning on Page 9.

The issue also includes other features designed to arm our readers with some of the facts they need to make judicious choices in this Year of Decision.

They are:

- Statements by the Democratic and Republican presidential candidates expressing their views on the nation's rural electric program and its importance in the development of rural America. Pages 13-14.

- A report summarizing the views of the U.S. Senate and U.S. House candidates in regard to the country's sagging economy. The story, prepared by Associate Editor Kemp Ward, begins on Page 15.

- An editorial examining the 1980 campaign and the opportunity it affords voters to influence the tone and texture of government's leadership. See Page 2.

I KEEP CONSERVING, BUT MY ELECTRIC BILL KEEPS CLIMBING.

If you're like me, you're conserving electricity every way you can. But your electric bill keeps going up.

Well, electricity is just like everything else. Food, clothes, gasoline, fuel oil, you name it. They all cost more these days.

But when you consider how much electricity means to you, and what life would be like without it, it's still one of the biggest bargains in the world.

So the only answer is to keep conserving, and manage as best we can.

We're All In This Together.

1980: A Year of Decision

Candidates Pledge Support For REA Programs

The presidential candidates in this Year of Decision were asked recently to prepare statements outlining their views on rural electrification and its role in the future development of rural America.

President Jimmy Carter, the Democratic standard bearer, and Republican Ronald Reagan issued the

President Jimmy Carter

Like many of you, I grew up on a farm that did not have electricity, and I'll never forget the day they turned the lights on in our house. Nor will I forget the impact that the rural electric cooperative, of which my father was director, had on our lives. He was the first director, by the way, of the Sumter Electric Membership Corporation.

This brought us electricity that freed us from much of the drudgery that had been commonplace in our lives. On the farm, it brought us power to do things we had never done before, it also involved everyone in our community in a cooperative effort to make our lives better.

Co-ops Play Crucial Role

Since that first wonderful day when the lights came on, I've witnessed the crucial role of electric cooperatives in rural development during a period of dramatic change in rural America. In my home state and throughout the

Ronald Reagan

I am pleased to respond to your inquiry and to present my position on the most vital issues as they affect rural electrification. But first I want to tell you how much I applaud the tremendous job rural co-ops have done in changing the face of America by providing electricity to 25 million Americans who might otherwise not receive its benefits.

Providing electricity in our rural areas has not only meant great productivity for American farmers but it has also decreased the burdens of rural women and has made their lives easier.

I believe that financing should be made available through REA insured and guaranteed loan programs to enable you to continue providing electricity to meet growth in rural areas. If at any time in my administration, changes become necessary in the rural electric program, those changes will be made with the advice and counsel of your rural electric leadership, to provide for the best statements below. The statements were later presented to a series of regional rural electric meetings across the country, sponsored by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association. Independent John Anderson declined to issue such a statement.

I've always cherished the independent spirit and the strong values of rural America. We know about hard work, that there can't be something for nothing, there is no easy, simple, cost-free way to deal with our problems.

When I was campaigning for the presidency back in 1976, I pledged my strong support of the Rural Electrification Administration program. And I'm proud to report that my administration has followed through on that commitment. With your help, and the leadership of (Agriculture Secretary) Bob Bergland and (REA Administrator) Bob Feragan, we have built an extremely vigorous REA program.

During the past 3½ years REA has loaned or guaranteed loans of more than $20 billion for rural electrification. This is more than three times the amount provided during the previous four years of the preceding administration.

times the amount provided during the previous four years of the preceding administration.

"A strong rural America depends on the continuation of a strong and viable REA program — and with your help I'm determined to make it even stronger and more effective in the future."

—Carter

Conservation, too, is an essential part of cutting our dangerous dependence on foreign oil and the inflation it produces. I'm proud that we have been able to cut oil imports 24 percent this year, and that we have more oil and gas wells being drilled today than at any time in the last 25 years. I encourage you to take full advantage of the REA energy conservation loan program that was interests of rural America and the nation.

We both know energy is the lifeblood of our economy. We cannot allow the security of American men and women to be threatened or their standard of living to be lowered by the lack of adequate energy supplies and a dependence on imported oil. We must all work together to aggressively boost the nation's domestic energy supplies and stimulate new energy technology and more efficient energy use. We both believe that coal and nuclear power offer the best near-term solutions to America's energy needs.

The safe design and operation of nuclear generating plants will have my administration's highest priority. I know that we can design and safely operate these plants in far less than the 10 to 12 years now required to license and build them.

The positions that NRECA members have adopted on energy through their resolutions process are highly commendable. You and I agree almost totally on every aspect of this nation's energy problem . . .

I sincerely commend all of you for the great work you have done in helping rural America grow and prosper. I pledge to you my continued support and willingness to work with you to solve the energy uncertainties of the future.

launched in June to help your members conserve our fuel supplies.

We must also make better use of our vast coal reserves. We're working on small scale hydroelectric projects and I'll also make up to 200 Corps of Engineer dams and 30 Department of Interior dams available for development of hydro power.

Of course, the key to having the funds to do what we need to do in energy is the windfall profits tax. We had a tough fight to get it passed. Now we have to make sure it isn't sabotaged by weakening amendments.

As you know, I've also proposed creation of an energy mobilization board which would cut unnecessary delays in power-plant production and construction and other energy projects. I intend to keep pressing for that authority. We will not sacrifice the environmental quality that lies at the heart of (rural) America's unique attraction to (us all). But we must strive to make that protection as cost-effective as we possible can.

I've fought hard to remove obsolete and unnecessary regulations that inhibit needed progress. We've already eliminated more than one-fourth of REA's own regulations, and still have a long way to go. The national REA program and the rural electric cooperatives, with your long experience and commitment to improving the lives of people in rural America, must play a major part in the development of future energy sources.

Your association was born in creative innovation that insisted that ways could be found to meet our people's needs. We did it then and we can do it now.

For my part, let me affirm to you what I told your leaders at the White House in December, 1978, and I repeat it again today — REA is one of the two best programs the government ever devised (the other is Social Security) and you, my friends, have given it the good reputation it has today.

Rural America Needs REA

We cannot stop now. A strong rural America depends on the continuation of a strong and viable REA program — and with your help I'm determined to make it even stronger and more effective in the future. I look forward to continuing to work with you to finish the job we've begun — in facing up to the tough challenges our country faces.

Together, we will not fail.

A Commitment to America and its Agriculture from Farm Credit:

Farmers, as a result of ever-increasing efficiency in operations, and their exports which strengthen the dollar, are the top inflation fighters in the country.

Farmers face rising production costs: fuel, fertilizer, chemicals, machinery and interest rates. Never before have farmers experienced greater need for good financial management. We encourage farmers and their cooperatives to limit borrowing to operating costs and other essential needs.

The Farm Credit System has a tradition of providing dependable credit to farmers and their cooperatives at the lowest cost consistent with sound business practices, in hard times as well as good.

Agriculture deserves the credit.

Congressional Candidates Agree: Balanced Federal Budget Needed

The candidates for North Carolina's 11 Congressional seats in next month's election come from diverse backgrounds and can be expected to take diverse stands on the important issues facing the state and nation.

However, virtually all agree on one issue — that the federal government must balance its budget if the nation's economy is to get on a firm footing again, even if it means hard times for many citizens.

They say the federal government must stop spending more money than it takes in, although that means a cut in federal programs. The views were expressed in a recent poll of the candidates conducted by Carolina Country.

Senate Candidates

Both candidates for the U.S. Senate feel that inflation is the biggest problem facing the U.S. economic system.

Both Sen. Robert Morgan and challenger John V. East want cuts in federal spending and a balanced federal budget. Beyond that, their views on the economy are somewhat different.

Morgan wants energy independence, and he is quick to say that "there will have to be some sacrifices" if the Federal government balances its budget. "No one believes this one act will win the war, but it will have a good psychological effect on the money markets, both here and abroad," Morgan said.

East has a totally opposite view of the effects of a balanced federal budget.

"Inflation will end when the federal government balances its budget," he says flatly.

East, a staunch conservative, also calls for investment incentives for business and industry and an end to what he considers unneeded federal spending.

"Too many politicians have attempted to blame inflation on the people. These politicians claim that businessmen who seek higher prices and workers who seek higher wages cause inflation. People searching for a better life don't cause inflation. Wasteful government spending does," East said.

In an effort to gain some insight into their views on the sagging economy, the candidates were asked to comment on the economy and how Congress can go about straightening it out.

The responses show much agreement, but there are some differences.

Republican candidates often called for immediate tax cuts and blasted what they referred to as "government interference" with business and industry, making it clear they feel business should be given a freer hand in the marketplace.

The Democratic candidates repeatedly mentioned the need for incentives for business and industry to increase productivity.

U.S. House of Representatives Candidates

First District

First District Rep. Walter B. Jones, sees inflation as the biggest threat to the nation's economy. He calls a balanced federal budget "absolutely essential" and suggests that it should be accomplished as soon as possible "even though this could be painful for beneficiaries of many federal programs." The country must also make strides toward being energy self-sufficient, he said.

Rep. Jones is the only Congressional candidate without opposition.

Second District

Second District Rep. L. H. Fountain and challenger Barry Gardner both say Congress must balance the federal budget.

Referring to it as "an insidious enemy," Fountain said inflation is doing great harm to the country, and federal spending must be cut "as painful as the process may be." He also favors a workable national energy program as a means of combatting inflation.

Gardner wants a "substantial" tax cut for individuals, business and industry to spur growth. The government should also ease its regulation of business, he said.

"Ultimately, the only real cure for our economy is increased productivity and all proper incentives to bring about this increased productivity should be applied," Gardner said.

Third District

Both candidates in the Third District feel that much can be gained by putting the breaks on federal spending.

Rep. Charles Whitley supports the move to balance the federal budget as a means of helping hold down inflation. He also intends to help push along new legislation that he believes would boost the economy.

Larry Parker puts most of the blame for the nation's economic woes on congress.

"Inflation is caused when congress votes to spend money the government does not have," he said. "We must put

Christmas Show Set For Nov. 15-23

The Southern Christmas Show, a traditional prelude to the holiday season for Tar Heels, is scheduled this year for Nov. 15-23 at the Charlotte Merchandise Mart.

More than 250 exhibitors will be featured this year.

Needlepoint Display Planned

A special display of work by the Queen Charlotte Chapter of the American Needlepoint Guild will be part of the Olde Towne section.

In addition, there will be a collection of Paul Schmid music boxes at Kelley Green's and a Tenant House filled with antiques. A Caswell Massey apothecary shop will be filled with delicious smelling soaps, lotions and perfumes — along with various other goodies for pampering.

The old-time post office and the fire station will return along with an old-time country store. The Village Church will be back, and there will be a unique collection of French santons, small figurines representing the crowds that gathered at the Nativity.

Plus, there will be special features by Asheville's Biltmore House and by Gastonia's Schiele Museum.

The Craft Village in Olde Towne will again be set up under tents and will feature quilters, artists, woodcarvers, potters and other crafts people demonstrating their skills and selling their products.

Christmas Stockings Exhibit Set

The North Carolina Home Extension Service Clubs will show winning Christmas stockings from their statewide competition. The Holiday Cooking Clinic will return featuring various North and South Carolina commodity groups and WBTV's Barbara Stutts.

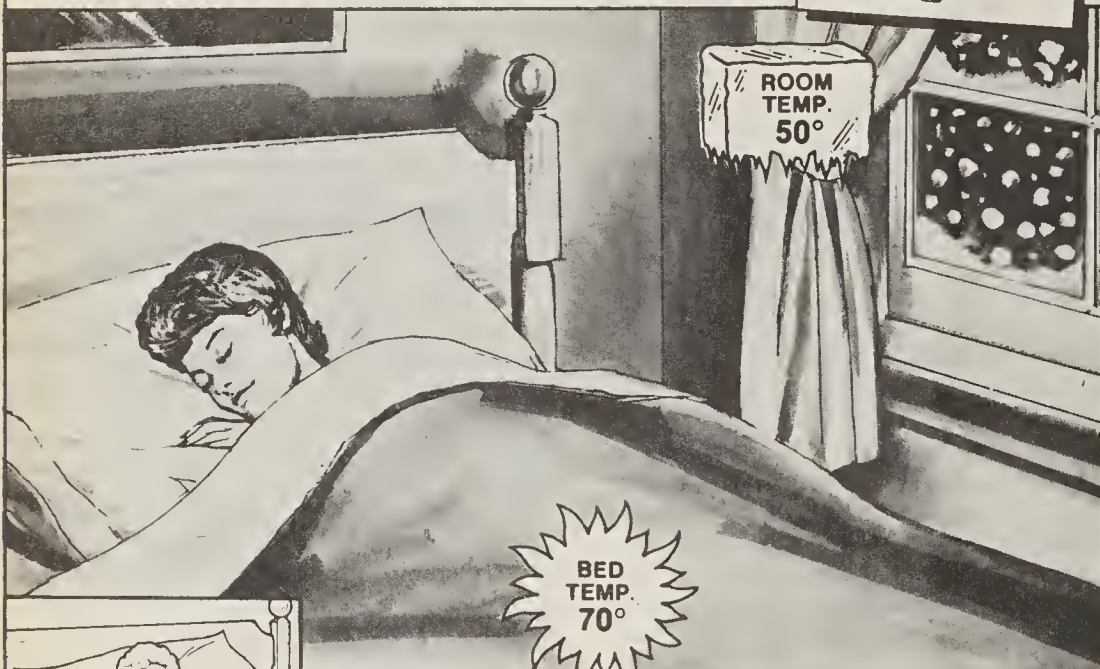

Hours are 10 a.m. — 9:30 p.m. daily, except Sunday, 11 a.m. — 6 p.m.

General admission is $3 for adults at the door, $2.50 in advance, and $1.50 for youth ages 10-18. Children under 10, excluding groups, admitted free with an adult. Special rates for groups of 30 or more persons are available.

For more information write Southern Christmas Show, 1945 Randolph Rd., Charlotte, N.C., 28207; or telephone (704) 376-6594.

Yesterday's Technology For Today

"It's yesterday's technology for today."

That's how Roy Edgerton Underhill likes to describe his profession as a woodwright — and it could just as easily serve as a description of the new 13-part series he hosts on the University of North Carolina Television Network.

The series, "The Woodwright's Shop," which debuted Oct. 2, explores the tools and techniques of the 19th Century country craftsman. Produced by the UNC Center for Public Television, it is scheduled for broadcast Thursdays at 9:30 p.m., with repeats on Sundays at 5 p.m.

In each segment of the series, Underhill uses local materials to produce needed articles and structures — as well as the tools he uses to make them. The projects he undertakes include chairmaking, white oak basketry and chair bottoming, the proper way to chop down a tree; timber frame construction, making dough bowls and farm tools, and panel framing and dovetailing.

Underhill Now with Colonial Williamsburg

Underhill, who made his home in North Carolina for a number of years, is now a 19th Century woodworker and the Master Housewright at Colonial Williamsburg.

He grew up in Washington, D.C., where he was most interested in science, outdoor life and woodcraft. He also won several national awards for his electronic exhibits.

In his teens, his independence and sly sense of drama emerged: He built a rocket-powered skateboard which blew up. His life was saved by the board's wooded body.

As a student at UNC-CH, he majored in drama, spending many hours creating special props and lighting machines for theatrical productions. At the same time, he found himself attracted to the back-to-the-land movement.

He moved to the country, where he lived in a house with wood heat while finishing school.

Tried Theater Work, Communal Living

After graduating, Roy moved to Colorado to help start a theater company. It fell apart and Roy gave up the theater to move to the mountain communes near El Rito, New Mexico. There, he committed himself to a life of self-sufficiency: living off the land, raising goats and bees, restoring windmills, building hotwater systems and solar ovens. He also built a house on a mountain top using an axe and a case of dynamite.

Underhill eventually became disillusioned by this experience, but still enjoyed rural life and felt that it would probably work better in a climate that was more productive.

Roy Underhill straddles a shaving horse while shaving the wood that'll be used as legs for a chair during production of the UNC Center for Public Television series "The Woodwright's Shop."

In 1974, he packed his VW bus and returned to North Carolina.

Entered Duke's Forestry Program

The following year, he entered the forestry program at Duke University. A sympathetic professor encouraged his study of early technology in wood.

With his graduate degree in hand, "Have broad axe, will travel," became his motto. He began lecturing on early American technology and began a private consulting business for museums that wanted to start a program in early woodworking.

Some of his presentations included: "Gleanings in the Art and Mystery of Early American Woodcraft" at Clayville Rural Life Center, Stagville Perservation Center, Duke Homestead State Historic Site and the North Carolina Botanical Gardens; "How Furniture was Made" at the North Carolina Museum of History; and "Log Restoration" at the Horace Williams House in Chapel Hill.

Underhill also taught restoration, using the tools of the period, and conducted formal workshops in early skills at the shop which he and his friends built in a secluded location along the Eno River.

Proposed TV Series To Network

Underhill brought the idea for a television series about woodworking to the UNC Center for Public Television.

Dressed in his work clothes and red suspenders, and carrying a rake, a gun powder shovel and a dough bowl, he walked into the office of Bob Royster, the director of programming.

"I made these things and I can teach other people how to make them in an entertaining and informative way," Underhill told him. Royster was impressed. After seeing Underhill actually make the items in his own shop, Royster was convinced. Months later, "The Woodwright's Shop" went into production.

Congressional Candidates Agree: Balanced Federal Budget Needed

a cap on that debt and put people in congress who will stand up and say enough is enough and will vote to stop this reckless spending."

Fourth District

Fourth District Rep. Ike Andrews and challenger Thurman Ray Hogan both want a balanced federal budget but disagree on what other steps should be taken.

"The key is increasing productivity, quality and efficiency. We need greater output by workers, expanded job opportunities, provision of incentives for individuals to save and invest and for businesses to expand and make capital investments, expansion of export markets, increased independence in energy and sharply reduced reliance on foreign sources of oil, as some examples," Andrews said.

Hogan also wants increased productivity plus decreased government regulation, but takes a different approach.

"Federal income taxes on individuals and businesses should be reduced across the board by one-third. This reduction will encourage savings, investment and economic activity. This increased economic activity will generate, along with the elimination of wasteful programs, increased revenues to allow the federal budget to be balanced."

Fifth District

Fifth district Rep. Stephen L. Neal, and challenger State Sen. Anne Bagnol, agree on balancing the federal budget and cutting federal spending, but not much else.

Neal wants Congress to take steps to improve productivity, cut taxes when possible "and prudent" and restrain the rate of growth of the money supply. "The present economic problems have been building up for many years, and I regret to say, the medicine to cure them will not always be palatable," he says.

Bagnol says Congress "must reduce the bureaucracy that is voraciously consuming our tax dollars." She says the best place to start is by completely doing away with the Department of Energy, which she says has done "nothing to help, much less eliminate the energy crisis." She also proposes doing away with the Department of Education and leaving operation of the schools to local people.

Sixth District

Sixth District Rep. Richard Preyer and challenger Eugene Johnston are looking in different directions on the economy. Preyer favors moves that would improve the productivity of business and industry, while Johnston wants an immediate individual income tax cut.

"The measures needed may include more stimulus for investment and for research and development; steps to make it easier for capital and labor to move from declining to new industries; regulatory policies which avoid unnecessary impediments to investment and productivity; reduced growth in the public sector; and removal of impediments to the international flow of trade and capital," Preyer said.

Johnston says, "Inflation continues to eat away at the pocketbooks of the people of this country, but Congress doesn't seem to be able to do anything about it. Tax cuts, along with cuts in government waste, are needed right away. We've got to do something to get this economy moving again."

Seventh District

Seventh district Rep. Charles Rose and challenger Vivian Wright both blame excessive government spending for our economic woes.

Wright also hits hard at what she considers government overregulation.

"I think recent steps by the leadership in congress to move toward a balanced budget are positive signs," Rose said. "This action in itself will not curtail inflation. Many worthwhile programs may have to be cut, but the hard fact remains that the tough decisions have to be made."

Wright blames the economic conditions on "the Democratic-controlled" Congress.

"The citizens of this country," she said, "need to elect individuals like myself who believe in the free enterprise system, who believe in a balanced federal budget, who believe government regulation is excessive for business and individuals alike, who believe bloated governmental programs need to be reduced, who believe that governmental deficit spending and the governmental printing of money result in higher inflation, and who believe that the federal government needs to have its power and influence reduced over the lives of the citizens of this country."

Eighth District

Eighth district Rep. W. G. (Bill) Hefner and challenger L. E. (Larry) Harris are worried about different things when it comes to the economy, but both say Washington is largely responsible for its present state.

Hefner wants a cut in federal spending. Harris wants a cut in federal regulation.

"A balanced federal budget is not only important in practical economic terms but also in symbolic terms as well," Hefner said. "This is the kind of leadership role congress should take. Federal spending must be brought under control. In fact, this alone is the most important contribution congress can make towards getting a handle on inflation."

Harris takes a different approach: "Private enterprise is the answer to our economic woes and therefore, the less government interference with the private sector, whether in the form of taxation, government regulation, allowances of trade deficits or otherwise, the better. Government regulation has overburdened business to the extent that business has become immersed in too much red tape."

Ninth District

Both Ninth District candidates feel that inflation is the biggest concern when it comes to the economy, and both feel that balancing the Federal budget is a partial answer.

But Rep. James G. Martin and challenger Randall R. Kincaid, do have some differences on the subject.

Martin puts it this way: "The urgent business of Congress is to relieve the inflationary pressures of rapid growth of government, excessive government spending and uncontrolled budget deficits. A rising tax burden has its own inflationary impact because it discourages investment and lends to our current frightening decline in productivity and jobs. Thus, while the federal budget must be balanced in order to ease that pressure on inflation, the way to do it is to limit government spending, rather than to pile on more taxes."

Kincaid wants Congress to assume more of a leadership role in fighting inflation, including coming up with a plan to restore price stability. "Such a plan should address and include the following elements: 'Fiscal restraint must be shown at all levels of government; Congress should aim for a balanced budget over the business cycle; we should place less reliance on the monetary policy of the Federal Reserve; we need a better definition of inflation so that entitlement programs better reflect inflation realities; wage and price controls should be avoided; increased economic productivity should be a major priority; we must insure that our economy is competitive.

Tenth District

Tenth District Rep. James T./Broyhill advocates a balanced federal budget and a reduction in government regulation of business and industry which he says is presently "strangling" American companies. Broyhill also wants a tax cut and an incentive program to encourage investment and modernization of industry and business. In addition, he says the government should encourage the development of more export markets for American goods.

"This country has the ability to come out from under its economic woes; however, the government must provide the leadership which has been sorely lacking in the past," he said.

Eleventh District

Both candidates in the Eleventh District want Congress to ease its regulation of business and industry and begin a program of new incentives for investment.

Rep. Lamar Gudger also feels the federal budget should be balanced, coupled with reductions in government spending.

"By taking these actions, the major contributing factors to inflation will have been removed," he said.

Bill Hendon wants a cut in taxes, both for individuals and business.

"And I'm not talking about election year tax cuts — I mean a sincere commitment to getting the government out of the working man's pocket and off the back of American business," he said.

—Kemp Ward

Special REA Loan Awarded For Study of Wood-Burning Plant

French Broad Electric Membership Corporation, Marshall, has been awarded a $735,000 loan from the Rural Electrification Administration for a feasibility study of a proposed wood-burning electric power plant.

The loan, which is the first of its kind to be authorized by the federal agency, will allow the EMC to test the practicality of using waste wood to fire a 10,000-kilowatt generating plant.

REA Administrator Robert W. Feragen said the loan was made as a result of a change in REA policy.

Until now, he said, "rural electric cooperatives used their own funds or borrowed from private sources to develop plans to determine project feasibility."

The new policy makes REA loan funds available for projects using renewable resources in order to encourage the use of such power sources.

The proposed plant would be erected on a 59-acre site west of Burnsville on the Cane River. It would burn sawdust and bark obtained from sawmills in the area.

At full capacity, the $17 million plant could provide 70 million kilowatt hours of power, or about one-third of the 212 million kilowatt hours the co-op expects to need in 1983, said Charles Tolley, the EMC's manager which could produce up to 460 kw after renovations are completed.

"Disturbed" By Editorial On Dishonest Politicians

I have just recently returned from visiting my family in New York and am quite disturbed after reading your July edition of Carolina Country. I am referring to the Page 2 "Viewpoint" concerning dishonest politicians.

Although I am quite proud to have been a North Carolina resident for almost nine years now, I do feel this article is extremely biased and reeks of anti-northern sentiments. This is a great disservice to the majority of your readers, who have little — if any — first-hand information regarding this issue. Certainly, sir, you would agree that there are good and bad in all walks of life and in all areas.

I would also like to offer some encouraging news for those who may share your same unenlightened viewpoint.

My father-in-law is the city engineer in the city of Yonkers, New York, and has held this position for well over fifteen years. In the course of his career he has had to deal with and respond to a number of questionable situations with political repercussions that a man of any less integrity might have succumbed to. I am proud to say that integrity, moral and judicious judgement and honesty are alive and well in the city of Yonkers thanks to this man of conviction and honor.

Perhaps, sir, you might give a moment to reflect that these qualities are the properties of individuals, rather than states.

Rolfe Neill Column Was "Rash, Uncalled For"

I read the article written by Rolfe Neill of the Charlotte Observer in your "Viewpoint" column. The remarks he made were very rash, uncalled for and black-balling three wonderful states. I wrote to him and he claims he got his information first hand. I worked in New York state for over 12 years. I was born in Pennsylvania and spent quite a lot of time as a soldier in New Jersey. I have been in a position to hear and know the facts.

But, a true gentleman doesn't write as Rolfe Neill did. For a businessman, he's sure dumb—unless he has proof, which I doubt.

I worked for Wurlitzer Co. in N.Tonawanda, N.Y. I got hurt in the Army and drove a company car until I got better health.

You can't pick one certain spot in the U.S.A. for your crooks. I'm sorry to see it in your little magazine, too. Many read it. Neill claims my facts are second hand. So are his.

Enjoyed June Issue's Cover

I enjoyed your June issue cover picture, made on the links of the Country Club of North Carolina at Pinehurst. I retired last year after having served 27½ years as secretary to R. A. Urquhart Jr., who has been president of that club since its inception in the early 1960s. I enjoy reading your magazine very much.

Complete Satisfaction . . . Or Money Back!

Tulips bloom in all their graceful splendor and brilliant color in spring . . . but they must be planted in fall! Our once-a-year offer features healthy, hardy planting stock bulbs (2¼-3" circ.), priced so fantastically low it is truly amazing. Better yet, you get a beautiful flaming mix assortment: brilliant reds, glistening whites, bright yellows, deep purples, gorgeous two-tones, etc. Best of all, you pay only 5¢ a bulb . . . 50 for $2.50, 100 for $4.75, or order 200 for just $8.95 and really save! At this unbeatable low price, you'll want all you can get. Easy planting instructions included with every order. Send today! We will rush your order in plenty of time to get your fall planting selections in the ground.

Every Year They Bloom Again . . Without Replanting!

Tulips are so popular, of course, because they bloom year after year without replanting, no need to take them up.

Given proper soil, care and with normal growing conditions, these bulbs will develop into larger size bulbs the first year's planting. In fact, we guarantee many blooms next spring, normal bloom the second season and many years thereafter. Furthermore, we guarantee to ship your order within 72 hours after we receive it. Don't pass up this once-a-year offer if you like to watch tulips grow and bloom in breathtaking color! Rush your order today!
